THE statement of His Excellency the Governor at a recent meeting of the Legislative Council relative to the convict LEE LUM Kwai must have been both satisfactory and reassuring to the native community. This out him .- Ordered to be sent to his steamer at prisoner was recommended for release, it appears, by Captain Ducar, for his services in attending to the victims by the Yesso explosion, and subsequently by Captain Demr-STER for his services as interpreter and for general good conduct. Neither of these gallant officers, however, probably knew much about LEE LUM KWAI's offence, and certainly neither of them understood how dangerous is the character of the man, or what a number of persons in the Colony have good reason to dread his release. His Excellency was, of course, better posted, and recognised the danger of letting such a clever, unscrupulous, and designing criminal loose by the members of the Choral Society. There riegfried refused to have anything to do with upon the Colony. LEE LUM KWAI was sentenced to penal servitude for life for one of "The Behemian Girl," which was skilfully promissory note for the amount, $135.60, and the fence and he received the same sentence for another, besides some odd years for a third offence. A wretch more worthy of the capital sentence probably never stood in the dock in Hongkong, but the principal portion of his operations had been conducted on the mainland, and therefore were out of the jurisdiction of the Court. But we have not yet left the Temple, and our description is still incomplete. To form a correct idea of it, the reader must understand—as everyone who lives in China will—that it is less a temple than a town. For streets read corridors, for squares read courts, for houses read kiosks, pavilions, and ancestral halls, and that is the Confucian Temple. The great ourling roofs hang proudly over their supports, and richly coloured by art as well as by time; the architecture of the whole s admirable, the material massive and costly. the design well-nigh complete. But the effect Disappointing to the last degree. Nor is the reason far to find. The whole place is a neglected wilderness. The fine board courts are covered with grass and woods; lumber is littered all over he enclosure; the undergrowth along many of the paths comes up almost to one's waist, lourishing as luxuriantly as on the wildest nountain side; while the beautiful stone steps. just under the overhanging portice of the temple. are—well, overhanging portices are generally a favourite resort for birds, and the stones in the immediate neighbourhood of this one can hardly have been cleaned for the last ten years or so. With two industrious gardeners constantly ibout, the Confucian Temple of Nanking might be made a charming resort; but as it is apparently against the "custom" of China to interfere with the operations of nature so far as to slovenly, and shamefully neglected place. But I must correct myself. The above re mark is too sweeping. The Chinese do pull up weeds, etc., sometimes. They neglect their temples, it is true—even the great shrine of superior man himself; but they do not let nature have her own way altogether. At this very moment there are men suspended by a rope in mid-air, seventy feet from the ground, industriously employed in pulling out all the little twigs, and blades of grass, and feeble wild flowers, which have found a home on the side of the city walls. There they swing, these stalwart warriors-for it is the soldiers who are being thus employed—picking here and tugging there, supported only by a very slender line and sitting contentedly on a bar of wood while hundreds of unturned faces express their interest in the operation by a placed grin as they pass by. The exact object which the Vicercy has in view is a matter of much conjecture. Some say that it is to improve the appearance of the walls; shrubs, and wild-flowers and such like trash look slovenly, and His Excellency likes to see things next. Besides, it is B universal law of Heaven that grass and flowers should grow out of the ground, and His Excellency doesn't approve of such irregular proceedings as things taking root in a wall there's semething impious about it. Others say that it is for purposes of protection. If some great army were to come marching along—from Kuang si, for instance—and unexpectedly present itself before Nanking just after the gates had been shut for the night, it is clear that thing would be easier for them than to scale the walls of the city, which are not more than ninety feet high, by the aid of these treacherous little weeds, and descend the other side by the same means, before anybody knew anything at all about it. Fut neither of these surmises is the true one—at least, I think not. The Viceroy is a far-sighted man, and looks a long way into the future. The fact is, so I am informed on good authority, that these perverse little tufts of grass, and nefarious little twigs, and folculous ittle flowers, are stealthily eating into the wall and undermining its strength; and as the wall is only a hundred and forty three feet thick a this particular part, a child can see that in the course of a few milleniums or so, serious damage might be done, unless it is arrested at once. That is the true reason why the soldiers Nanking are now swinging so much higher than Haman and risking their lives with such consummate fortitude at the behest of their respected Vicerov. Let no one ever dure to say, henceforth, that public works and public interests are neglected by the statesmen of this Empire.

It is reported here that Dr. Macartney is about to leave the Imperial Chinese Diplomatic Service and return to China. I am unaware how that he would have continued in his post now

THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE ON MERV The recent capture by Colonel Lomakin of the Turcoman stronghold of Kizil Arvst will doubtless set many people thingking as to the designs Russia may have upon Mery, and there will be persons, who will fancy that the capital of the lekki tribe and the ruins of a city which once possed of a million inhabitants is about to fall immediately a prey to the advancing Muscovite. That well-founded apprehensions exist as to the progress of Russia towards a strategical point which we have been accustomed to call one of our outposts of India there can be no possible doubt, and while the Russians are congratulating themselves on the success of their arms it will not be out of place to examine the country that lies between their possessions and the menaced Turcoman fortress. This will be best effected by taking the three roads leading to Mervin detail, and discussing their characteristics separately. The casiest of these, in the opinion of Captain Burnaby, Colonel Venukoff, and other onmont authorities, is the road from the Caspian, and this is precisely the one that is now being followed by the Russian authorities. Perhaps the best account of this route yet published is from the pen of Mr. Stebnitski, a member of the Russian Geographical Society. who explored the Turcoman deserts in 1873. The most convenient starting point, in his opinion, is Fort Michaelovski-the one recently adopted by Golonel Lomekin-which is considerably nearer than Krasnovodsk, and is provided with a good harhour for the reception of steamers and transports. "The difficulties of the read are found in the first march, which lies across a saline sandy track for fifteen miles. Here, at Mullakara Post, is stalloned a Russian detachment, and twenty miles north there is another stationed on the slope of the Balkan tableland. Tasharvat, as the latter place is called, is the very best point our troops occupy in this recion on account of its strong position, and it is furnished with abundance of water, is close-to dense forests, and is surrounded by excellent soil. It would be an admirable spot for cantoning troops in the event of war. The second march, terminating at Tarier, is very easy, and at the and is a good well, fields cultivated by Turcomans, and plenty of ground capable of greater cultivation. At Aiden is another well. At Kazantchik. helf way between Tagier and Kizil Arvat, and 143 versts from the Caspian, is a fine steam of water and abundant grass. In a word, all the nine marches from Mullakara to Kizil Arvat. save one, are provided with wells; and the water. although tinged with a mineral infusion is neither injurious nor unpleasant to drink. The road runs along the south side of the i ig Balkan. then sourts the north side of the Little Balkan. and throughout its whole distance from Mulla-kara is bordered by vegetation." "Kizil Arvat Fort is a very valuable strategical point. It is our foremost post in the Turcoman steppe, and is situated in a convenient district in the midst of a broad valley, lying between the Kurrendach hills and the source of the full flowing stream of the Kizil Arvat Su, a river sufficient not only for the wants of the garrison and its numerous herds, but for the arge number of Tarcomans who environ the fort with their tents and encampments." Mr. Stebnitski visited the fort in 1872, two years after it had been occupied by a Russian detachment Last summer, during a siege by Turcomans, the garrison, for want of supplies, was obliged to quit the post and fall back upon the Caspian This summer the fort has apparently been occapied again. From Krasnovodsk it is situated 253 miles: from Michaelovski about 190; from Khiva it is ten days' camel journey and eight on horseback. Mery lies 300 miles beyond, and would take at the lowest estimate three weeks for troops to perform. The road to Mary runs sinuously along the northern slope of the Kope Dagh flanking Khorassan, and is dotted wit sixty small Turcoman forts, for the most part creeted near streams or mines. The greater number of the people collected near the forts are engaged in growing corn, and many devote their attention to cattle breeding. The whole line of the Turcoman forts according to information gathered by General Stolekoff-the Russian envoy at Cabul-is abundantly supplied with water, invariably flowing from the Kopet Dagh in streams. On account of the proximity of the forts to the streams, the Turomans encamp alongside them in the summer to work, while much truth there may be in the rumour; but the camels and sheep browse farther off on the Dr. Macartney is an old friend of the Marquis steppe. In the summer the horses are turned charged with being drank and neglecting to pay Taong, and one would have thought it likely adrift in the rich pasture land of the Arkay Val. ley in the winter they are conflued within the Arvat to Gyandes, the Turcomans plan corn, the Engineer of the Manchester Steam Users' barley, water melons, flax, and cotton. FRESH ELECTRIC LIGHT DISCOVERY

A fall of no loss than seven per cent. took place on the 8th October in the price of the Gas Securities dealt in on the Stock Exchange. I recent, intelligence from the United States may be oredited, the electric light is about to assume form which will very scriously affect the position of the Gas Companies. Mr. Edison, the nventor of the telephone the phonograph, the aerophone, the megaphone, the microtasimeter, and a host of other things, is said now to have crowned his achievements by discovering a method whereby the electric light, instead of being concentrated in a few dazzling fooi, can be subdivided into almost any number of lights. This has been the great desideratum in the art of electric illumination. The Loutin machine s understood to be capable of dividing the current so as to distribute it among 14 or even 20 lights and there has been some promise that it would even go to the extent of 40 lights. It. was the claim of the Jablochkoff "candle" to distinction that it reduced the solitary blaze of electric radiance into a series of four lights. or perhaps more, a result which at that period was without precedent. It is but a short time since the Jablochkoff "candle" created a nies; but already we see an immense advance on anything that was promised or threatened at Chermometer attached 78.0 72.0 75.0 C4.0 that period, so far as concerns the sub-division of the light. As matters stood some months ago it was tolorably evident that the best results of the Jablochkoff, the Lontin, and other forms of the Electric Light would only provide a superior mode of illumination for the public streets and for large establishments, leaving the Gas Companies in the undisturbed possession of the large and profitable class of custom connected with the small consumers. Following on this tentative kind of progress there suddenly comes an announcement that the very citadel is about to be assaulted, and that electricity is to dominate over the entire area of artificial illumination. Mr. Edison has telegraphed to his agent in England to say, "I have just solved the problem of the sub-division of the Electric Light indefinitely but it will not be shown until all the patents are secured, and then I will send a description." STATE OF WEATHER .- B. Clear blue sky. C. Cloudy. D. The Metropolitan Gas Companies have just been holding their half-vearly meetings, and at each of these gatherings the subject of the Electric Light has been discussed. The directors have in all instances given the same answer—that however useful the Electric Light might prove for illuminations on a large scale, there was no likelihood that it would ever compete with gas for the multitudinous purposes in which only a moderate amount of light was required. The in creased employment of ms for heating purposes was also looked upon as a special domain of the Gas Companies, not at all likely to be invaded by the Electric Light Companies of the future. But it is now stated that Mr. Edison means to make war with gas all along the line. The electric cable is to be laid in every street, and the insulated wires are to enter the houses along the line of route, each wire conveying not only light, but also power and heat. Mr. Edison is reported as saying. " With the nowar you can run an elevator sewing machine, or Boy other mechanical contrivance that requires a motor, and by means of the heat you may cook your food." Very little the heat, and in like manner Mr. Edison respects the copposical-sentiments of the public by promising to apply his Electric Light apparatus to the existing gas fixtures. When the flame is wanted we have only to touch a little spring, and the electric jet darts forth at once. As for cost, we are to have as much light for 6d, or 7d, as we now get from a thousand cubic feet of cas, the owest price of which in London is Ss., the amount [11 A M P A G N E, charged by the South Metropolitan, which is the chespest of the London Gas Companies.
